DISEASES OF THE SCALP.

The skill of the medical faculty in treating diseases of the scalp has, in a majority of cases, been found to be wanting. It is not to be wondered at, as it requires great study, deep research and a careful investigation of the causes which produce the disease. Unless the cause is discovered, it is an utter impossibility to effect a cure. Professor De Munn's Hair Restorer, however, has been pronounced a remedy by some of the most eminent physicians. I have de-

(Testimony of Mrs. Sarah Gould.)

Past, Dr. Munn: Two years, my scalp became diseased and had commenced to fall out very fast. This disease spread until my head was one complete mass of hair. In fact, I was bald, except where broken; the burning and itching sensation was unbearable; I would apply constantly after remedy, but only momentary relief. I consulted several physicians, and was told my scalp was the victim of the "Scalp Disease," and that they could not benefit me. A recent advertisement, and coincided to consult you. You assured me that you would eradicate the disease, and restore my hair, which had become very thin. With this assurance, placed my trust in your hands, and you did it. I am a fair-haired friend of nature; my scalp is perfectly well; and my hair has ceased to fall out. Respectfully yours,

Jubilation on the Passage of the Abolition Amendment—A Disgusting Abolition Exhibition—Members of Congress Embracing Negroes in a Public Dining-Room—A Man, a Brother and a Voter."

Washington, February 1.

Willard's Hotel was last night the scene of a most disgusting exhibition. The Republicans were so elated with their success in carrying the Abolition amendment that they determined on having a grand jubilation in honor of the event, and Willard's was the place selected for the carnival. Several of the most noisy members of the House were present, including some of those who, during the day, recorded their infamy by supporting the great Abolition measure, and thus betraying their constituents. The best feeling prevailed among all collected in the large dining hall. Negroes of every complexion were there, and, of course, they entered fully into the spirit of the occasion. The negroes were distinguished by white sashes and other fixings peculiar to colored gentlemen who attend upon guests at hotel dining tables.

When the dishes were removed, wine was ordered, and for a while the feast of good things was enjoyed, with ordinary decorum. But et vino veritas, says the saying, so it was at Willard's last night. Speeches were made ad libitum—your Abolitionists is a tremendous fellow for speech making when the theme is congenial—and congratulations on the glorious victory of the day passed along the tables. The virtues and noble attributes of the illustrious negro were extolled by gentlemen of an imaginative turn, and the worshipers of the New England idea were honored with the most glowing apostrophes of which intuited eloquence is capable. The wrongs of the negro, and the right of Massachusetts to rule the country, formed the staple of the speeches made, while articulation remained clear enough to be distinguished; and when the limits of sobriety were passed, the noble supporters of the Administration became so demonstrative in their affection for the oppressed children of darkness, that serious tears were felt for the safety of the furniture.

Gentlemen who would scorn the imputation of intoxication, were so overcome by their feelings that they clasped the oppressed children, etc., to their patriotic bosoms, and assured them, in the language of Mr. McCawber, that they would never, no, never, desert them. Some, after great efforts, informed others that they were too full for utterance; but it is to be deeply regretted that they did state, notwithstanding their degree of accuracy, what they were full of. A few ill-natured persons were afterward known to say that the white knew something about it, but that gentleman was prudently silent.

The disgusting orgies were kept up for several hours, and while some remained there was no abatement in the enthusiasm. Mr. Brandauer, a Representative from the land of steady habitation, was particularly demonstrative toward the waiters. With tremulous voice he addressed an individual of that profession, and declared that he was "a man and a brother, and would soon be a voter." The two men and brothers were soon locked in a fraternal embrace, and it was then proposed to start a mutual admiration society, but for some reason, the motion was not seconded. Mr. B. was assisted to his seat after the exhaustion consequent upon this affectionate outburst, but was soon on his feet again, professing his unconquerable love for the negro, and reiterating the assurance that the dark skinned portion of the company were men and brethren, and would soon be voters.

Others whose names have not been mentioned were equally affectionate. They declared that the millennium had arrived, that the time had at last come when all men were equal, socially and politically; that miscegenation should henceforth be encouraged; that the negro should enjoy all the rights heretofore restricted to the white man, and the destiny of the descendants of Ham would be the most glorious ever vouchsafed to mankind.

The spectacle was the most disgusting and degrading ever witnessed in the capital of the country. To see members of Congress fraternizing with negroes—actually hugging them in a public dining room—was sufficient to fill with loathing any man having even an ordinary sense of propriety. It was a fitting climax of the infamous proceedings of the day; an appropriate addenda to the outrage that was designed to rob eight million of people of nearly all the wealth they possessed. It shows the debasement to which the country has been brought, when Representatives of the people—men who should jealously guard the honor which has been intrusted to them—openly blazon their basitility at the doors of the capitol, and take to their bosom the lowest of the human creation.

The matter has been a topic of conversation in all parts of the city to day. It was talked in hotels, in the streets and in the capitol, and those who were parties to it were denounced with the utmost indignation by all who have a proper respect for the honor of the nation. Even the "socialists" engaged in it were said to be heartily ashamed of their conduct, but their repentence will not long outlive the carousals of last night.
